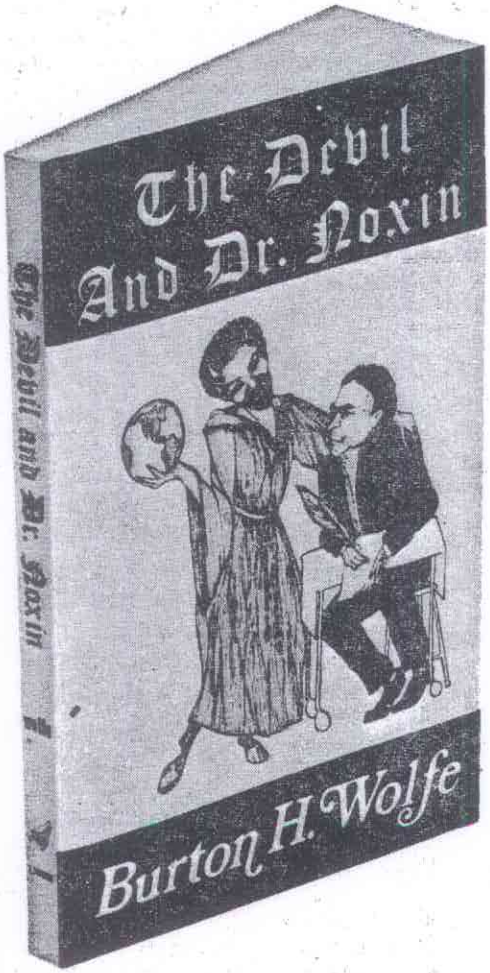
A New Underground Classic —'Better Than MacBird'



"This book does for Nixon what MACBIRD did for Lyndon Johnson, and does it far better. Although deeply religious and moralistic, unlike MACBIRD it's also very funny, and that makes it easy to read Wolfe's psychoanalysis of the President and American ethics. I think his NOXIN is one of the most important books of our age."

"What an uncanny book this is! There will be a thousand attempts to explain Nixon and Watergate, but none will succeed as well as Wolfe's book because it reaches to the very soul of America. Every politician and priest should study it, and it ought to be required reading in the universities. The Black Mass, the psychoanalysis of the President, and his hypocritical plea for redemption comprise three of the most powerful scenes in all literature."
— EARL CONRAD, Author - Jimcrow America, Scottsboro Boy, biographies of Errol Flynn and Billy Rose, and other bestselling books.

"This is the deadliest satire of Nixon or any leader in the history of American letters, and the thing that makes it so deadly is its satire of all Americans and their way of life as well. If people are reading anything a century hence, they will be reading this book to understand our era, for nothing else makes it so, uh, perfectly clear."
— SIBLEY S. MORRILL, Author - Ambrose Bierce and the Crystal Skull, and other books.
